Prayer to Avoid Illness (literally: So As Not to Come into the Hands of Sickness)

From the book Servant of the King (Job 36:19) ¹

A person should always pray for mercy to avoid illness, because if illness happens then they say to him “Bring a merit and be freed.” ² And he should pray that no troubles of any kind come to him, and whether about physical or spiritual needs a person should put forth prayer and pour pleas before The Holy and Blessed One to be protected from all sins and wrongdoing, from any disease, or anything bad. It is good to pray regularly, saying:

Master of the World, please help me and all of your healthy people of the Nation of Israel to avoid illness, sin, and death (heaven forbid), and not to need to go to physicians or be involved in treatments. Quickly send a full recovery to all of your people of the Nation of Israel who are ill. Protect us from all kinds of trouble, suffering, stress, poverty, and from anything bad, so that we will be able to serve you and study your Torah for its sake, without any impediment.

¹) Job 36:19: The cited text indicates that neither wealth nor physical strength can protect a person from illness, then goes on to explain that G-d uses illness or other suffering to instruct people and awaken their desire to repent.

²) Babylonian Talmud, tractate Shabbat, דף לב עמוד א (folio 32A): Rabbi Isaac the son of Rabbi Judah said that a man must always pray that he should not become sick, for if sickness befall him then they [the Heavenly Tribunal] say to him “Bring a merit and be freed” — in other words, recovery from illness has a price, diminishing a person’s merits. Earlier on 32A, Rabbi Yannai said that a person should never stand in a dangerous place and expect to be miraculously protected from harm, because the miracle might not happen, and even if it does, it will be deducted from that person’s merits. The Torah source cited there was when Yaakov asked to be saved from attack by Esav (Genesis 32:11), but he humbly felt himself to be unworthy, fearing that his merits were too severely diminished by having accumulated 4 wives, many children, and abundant wealth.
